

Abstract

The invention relates to a decomposition-resistant polyamide which is produced by means of anionic polymerisation of at least one lactam in the presence of at least one basic catalyst and optionally at least one activator, a deactivator consisting of a proton donor and an amine being added following the completed polymerization in the melted state.